he started on the journey, especially as Inspector Rowls was more mysterious than over and begged to be allowed to take his seat in the carriage with him. Mr. Portpous was not a little startled at this reinest, which he readily completed with, as it seemed evident that some special danger was apprehended. Ouring the drive to the station Mr. Rowle pecred emetably only of the ginder in a very viciliant drive to the station Mr. Rowse peered constantly out of the window in a very vigility manner, and as they approached the neighborhood of Paddiagrion, hd. said suddonly to Mr. Pompres: "Will you kindly oblige me by leaning well forward now, sir?"

Mr. Pompres, bring startled mechanically did so, when it suddenly occurred to him that his features shush be distinctly visible, owing to a give of light which they were just passing. He therefore hast by full back into the recesses of the carriage, exclaiming:
"Good grandous, many! Why. I shall be rec-

"Gottain's not. Why, it would be sticidal!" said Mr. Pompous, ind grautly.

"For heaven's aske, sir, do as I ask you!" exclaimed the descrive, with suppressed accident. "Everything may be lost by your hidlar yourself" "Are you mad?" roared Mr. Pompous, "Mo, sir, Perhama I qught to explain," said Inspector Rowle, hurriedly. "The fact is you now were in the sightest danger yourself—at least, you would not have been if your name had been known to certain partirs. The truth is you have been mistaken for the Right Honorable Mr. Blank," he added, naming a prominent acmber of the each net.

"Is—is that the reaso! I have been guarded?"
inquired Mr. Pumpons, taken aback, "Yos, sir. When we found out the mistake we did our best to keep up the delusion, and I smater to think we've been golerably successful," said the detective in a complacent topo.
"Why did you keep in the lolusion?" demanded Mr. Pumpous, with susden access of foaming at the moutz. "Why on earth should It"

"The honogable Mr. Blank is going down to Window, and I've received contain information that an attack will do made upon him as he steps from his carriage at the station. We shall servive there first."

"And you sepool Be to set as a decoy duck?" they missed Mr. Pompous violently.

"I assupe you, sir, there will be no danger," eried too detective sagerily. "At the first shot the asimen will be seized. For goodness cake, above your face at the visidow, sir, so that the sound have a signal your approach."

Mr. Pompour only suiver was a kind of gurie, within some to present the property of the property of the seized. The shot is the contained to present an apoplette at the shock string and shouled wildly to the conclusion.

Time to Bay Carpeta.

For some weeks post, says The Carpet Trade, the advertising columns of the daily papers of New York city have schibiled a panoramic display of apparently marked dimuntion in retail prices which is far from grafifying to the generality of carpet men. Reveral large farms, dealing wholly or part-ally in carpets are retail, have been or teasively after-tising the duor grades of carpeting at prices to low as the excited the possibility of profit. Assumators have been advertised at $150, when every asupet man known that to cut these goods at such a figure must necessarily ental a lows upon the deeler. Wiltons and Moquettes have been advertised at correspondingly low prices. Body Brussels of makes which have for years bell a pruntisent of the second have been advertised at rainons rates, which speak ill of the speedy rottern of reasonable profits. Offering Brussels at 1 to $1.50 per part, as has been ant still is being done, is an evidence that there is a "scrow loces" somewhere. There is no incompletely in the advertised prices of Wilton's and Moquettes; in fact, there is little enough profit even at the regular price. The gib immensed quantities of grood may be "sla.hed" at the advertised prices, there must be a oarly reaction which will exceede a detimental effect underlined prices, there must be a oarly resource which will exceede a detimental effect underlined prices, there must be a cather to the post of production.
